Soundline NORTH SHORE, LONG ISLAND

Opening September 2027 · grades six through eight

Two hours of practice. Four hours of making. Every adult knows your kid.

A new independent middle school on the North Shore, with ten to twelve students in a grade, one advisor who stays with your child for three years, and a grade added each year through twelfth.

Practice
8:30, two hours: math, reading, writing, at your child's own pace

Making
Four hours, to 3:00: seminar, lab, studio, the Quest. Defended out loud every six weeks

Extended Day
3:00 to 5:30, if you need it

How it works

Grouped by skill, not age. Nobody moves on until they've got it, and nobody waits once they have.

Real work, finished, shown to someone. A robot, a documentary, a song for the ensemble. Every six weeks, a defense. No slides.

Fridays, the whole school builds one thing. At 2:00 someone presents and something is performed. Families welcome.

Who's building it

Nicole Galante, founder. Twenty years helping schools get better; led the team that wrote New York's framework for virtual schools.

Adam King, lead guide. Runs instrument labs and escape rooms for libraries across Long Island.

Gina Dimichino, operations. Thirty-five years teaching North Shore kids to dance. Izzy Galante, academic systems.

What it costs

$1,500 a month, paid over twelve. Founding families pay $1,350, and that rate holds through twelfth grade. The three-day Collaborative for homeschooling families is $900, or $810 founding. No fees on top.

We don't have a lease yet. The $500 that reserves a seat sits with an independent escrow agent, not with us, and comes back in full until the day one is signed.

See it before you hear about it.

Free Saturday builds for ages ten to thirteen all winter: instruments out of junk, a Quest, world percussion. Drop off at ten, come back at 11:15 and watch your own child explain something they made to a room. Dates and a spot at soundlineschool.com/build.

Or fifteen minutes on the phone about your child, not the school: soundlineschool.com/talk

A federal scholarship tax credit begins January 2027, the school year we open. Everything we know is at soundlineschool.com/scholarship. Non-sectarian, independent, five days a week.

hello@soundlineschool.com
soundlineschool.com